interested witness, though he did not take a very active part in the hearing. He happened to be present when Gen. Colby was questioning Hopfenmaier, the junk dealer who bought the articles from Capt. Brannon that were said to have been stolen from the weather bureau. Hopfenmaier made a very good impression at the hearing, although he seemed very nuch averse to the publicity this case has brought him. He insisted that if the goods were stolen he had no reason to believe were stolen he had no reason to believe it. Part of his business was the purchase of condemned property from the government departments and he supposed that all that came from the weather bureau had been properly condemned. He averred that he had always endeavored to be, as he put it, "an honest junk dealer, though high moral characters are very rare in that profession."

At the suggestion of The Star reporter yeaterday Capt. Derby looked into this matter and discovered a way to particulty remedy the difficulty. There are any number of applicants who are not only willing to pay one-half of the cat of laying the mains, but would willingly stand the entire expense. Capt. Derby thinks that the permit system can be applied to the remaining anoney now on hand and today notified the first twenty applicants that if they made application within ten days the water department would pay one-half of the cost of laying the mains. It is expected that the applicants will avail themselves of this opportunity to get a water main. for this was the first break in a rather uninteresting hearing.

As to the removal of the type, Mr. Hopfenmaier stated in the most emphatic manner that he had never taken a single pound of type from the weather bureau. If any one said he had it was a deliberate falsehood. Furthermore, he had never had two wagons at the weather bureau at the same time. There had never been enough goods to remove at one time to require two wagons. As to the molds for printers' rollers he had never, to the best of his knowledge, purchased any. Hopfenmaier said that he made it a rule in dealing with the departments to pay in checks, to avoid any question at all, but Capt. Brannon objected to this on the ground that it was inconvenient to bother with cashing checks for small sums. The only check he made was in favor of Capt. Stone. In the other transactions he paid cash and the money was handed over to Capt. Brannon.

Hopfenmaier then requested permission to Young but Prosperous. The Ninth Street Christian Church, corner 9th and D streets northeast, celebrated its second anniversary the past week. This church has had a remarkable growth. It was organized in April, '91, with sixty-five members from invited to attend.

was handed over to Capt. Brannon.

Hopfenmaier then requested permission to make a statement to show his connection with Brannon. When Brannon was in the Post Office Department he was in the junk business as well, and Hopfenmaier raised the point that he should pay a junk dealer's license, and this made an unpleasant feeling between them. Their relations had been strictly in the line of business and he wished now he had never had any at all.

"There is considerable of the Dutch about me," said Hopfenmaier. "I don't often forgive and I never forget. I never went to see him, for he always came to see me when he had snything to sell. There have been a number of other junk dealers, and I don't see why I should be singled out from all of them. I have never pastor, Rev. E. B. Bagby, will begin a two weeks' revival service April 9.

other junk dealers, and I don't see why I should be singled out from all of them. I have never had any dealings with any other employe of the weather bureau."

Allen Spencer, the colored driver of the mail wagon for the bureau, testified that he carried some cases and rugs to Capt. Brannon's house. Then he brought some goods back, but could not say whether it was all, as he kept no account. He did remember, however, that he never brought the cases back. He could not be sure but that some one else had taken them back. He never took any articles to the house of any other official of the weather bureau. An Officer Enlists as a Private.

of the recovery of the bolt of linen and the arrost of the foreman of the printing shop. Later witness and Detective Lacey were delegated to find out about some articles that were missing from the weather bureau. They found that the junk dealers had purchased considerable property from the bureau. The first time he saw Brannon was at Hopfenmaier's, and Brannon was so drunk that they could get nothing out of him. The next day Brannon admitted to Weedon that he had sold some stuff to Hopfenmaier, but said that it signified nothing, as he had the authority of the office to sell it.

Mr. Weedon then went on to tell of the unsuccessful search that was made of Byan's cellar. The goods had been removed when they got there, but they found a bucket full of nails that had evidently been drawn from boxes. There was a box of books that evidently belonged to the signal service, the top of the box addressed to the weather bureau, and a new ax, the fac-simile of which they saw at the bureau.
